The "four causes" are elements of an influential principle in Aristotelian thought whereby explanations of change or movement are classified into four fundamental types of answer to the question "why?". Aristotle wrote that "we do not have knowledge of a thing until we have grasped its why, that is to say, its cause." While there are cases where identifying a "cause" is difficult, or in which ...

It's not hard to write IO code in pure functional languages. They all provide a simple mechanism for writing IO code that works just like it does in imperative languages. All they do is enforce that you can't call IO code inside other code whose interface is declared as not performing IO. An analogy would be a dynamic language programmer complaining that a statically typed language like Java ...

Where do the terms "equality" and "identity" come from? The standard does not use those terms. It calls == "abstract equality" and it calls === "strict equality". Granted calling == any kind of "equality" is IMHO awful, since it is not transitive, but why quibble? I take more issue with "identity" though; I think that term is pretty misleading, though it "works."
